Telcordia Technologies, Inc. v. Cisco Systems, Inc.
C.A. No. 04-876 (GMS)

Dear Judge Sleet:

At the March 30, 2007 Pretrial Conference, there was a discussion of revisions to the Preliminary Jury Instructions. At Your Honor's urging, the parties agreed to revisit the disputed instructions and attempt to reach an agreement as to the form. The two disputed issues were the definition of prior art in the "Parts of a Patent" instruction, and the presentation of disputed issues in the "Summary Of The Patent Issues" instruction. Early this week, Defendants provide counsel for Telcordia with a "redline" document reflecting their proposal as to these two disputes; in both cases, Defendants made minor textual edits to Telcordia's proposed instruction in an effort to achieve the objectives agreed upon at the Pretrial Conference. Although Defendants requested that Telcordia respond promptly with its views on their proposal, Defendants have not heard back from Telcordia.

Because the jury will be selected and preliminarily charged tomorrow morning, Defendants are providing the Court with their proposed language. Accordingly, we attach for the Court's convenience: (1) a redline reflecting Defendants' proposed changes as sent to Telcordia earlier this week (Ex. A); and (2) a clean copy of the preliminary jury instructions without the parties' objections (Ex. B). We are also hand delivering a CD containing a WordPerfect version of these documents.

Respectfully,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read "Jack Blumenfeld". The signature is fluid and cursive, with the first name "Jack" and last name "Blumenfeld" clearly distinguishable.
